(Unsigned Hardcover Novella) Gravity Dreams is a notable new chapter in Stephen Baxter's Xeelee future history, accompanied here by a new Introduction from the author and Raft, the short story that twenty years ago began the tale so compellingly continued here. A million years from now, humankind is in full retreat before the onslaught of the Xeelee, enigmatic aliens whose influence pervades the entire cosmos. Once rulers of the galaxy, our descendants must abandon planet after planet as their implacable foes seal off those worlds from the light of their parent stars. The Second Coalition is organising desperate evacuations, and frantically looking for exotic weapons from the far past to combat the Xeelee. Yet in this age of panic and decline, an unlikely grouping—a high-ranking Coalition officer, an aged savant, a teenage boy, and a dealer in antiquities of extraordinary kinds—strives to carry out the strangest of rescues, keeping alive the dimming flames of altruism and hope.

Reviews of the Gravity Dreams [hc] by David A. Hardy, Stephen Baxter

Eyalanev

I was disappointed to discover that some or all of the stories in this booklet were already present in some of the other xeelee sequence collection books.

Jugore

I have followed the Xeelee sequence rather faithfully and this story was a bit of let down in terms of plot and hard sf elements. I am really surprised this is being sold as a standalone book. The whole book is 101 pages with the last 10 being an excerpt from the original Raft short story. About 90 pages of new story with lots of recycling of plot elements from prior shorts. I wouldn't recommend purchasing this at all.
